[Intro: Spoken-word sample: Ken Kesey]

I believe with the advent of acid we discovered a new way to think, and it had to do with piecing together new thoughts in your mind. ...

Why is it that people think it's so evil? What is it about it that—that is—scares people so deeply? Even the guy that invented it. What is it? Because they're afraid that there's more to reality than they have confronted. That there are doors that they're afraid to go in, and they don't want us to go in there either, because if we go in, we might learn somethin' that they don't know. And that makes us a little out of their control

[Spoken-word sample from The Beyond Within]

If you're introduced to LSD, unless you've taken some other drug—like, for instance, say, marijuana or something—well, you know, it's altogether a new thing, and you actually can have a religious experience; and it can be even more important than reading the Bible six times, or be—becoming a (uh) pope or something like that, you know?
